

Confidence and Self-Esteem Hypnotherapy Berkshire Darren Carter Low confidence and poor self-esteem are conditions that respond particularly well to hypnotherapy because they are fundamentally patterns of subconscious belief rather than rational assessments of fact. The person who knows intellectually that they are capable but cannot feel it, who avoids opportunities because of a deep-seated sense of inadequacy, or who is unable to assert themselves in professional or personal situations is experiencing the effect of subconscious beliefs that were formed long ago and that no longer reflect reality. Darren Carter Hypnotherapy in Wokingham addresses confidence and self-esteem at exactly this level. Darren's clinical background includes performance therapy as well as his core hypnotherapy practice, and his work on confidence encompasses both the removal of limiting beliefs and the installation of more accurate and supportive ones. The hypnotherapy process is used to identify and update the specific internal representations and thought patterns that sustain low confidence, while also building the somatic experience of confidence in the body so that the change feels real rather than simply conceptual. Clients who have worked with Darren on confidence and self-esteem describe changes that have affected their professional lives, their relationships, and their overall wellbeing in significant ways. One client described that after sessions for confidence and anxiety, she was much more confident in situations she would previously have avoided, and that her career goals had returned.
