Croatia in winter isn't my preferred overall-- the majority of the shore feels too silent and the climate is stormy and windy on several days, but Dubrovnik is a clear exemption. If you fly right into Malaga, you can invest a number of days in the city by the coast and afterwards lease a vehicle to check out the region. That's when you can discover coastal communities, drive beautiful roads, and take pleasure in Montenegro's covert treasures without groups-- all on a small budget. Also Istanbul really feels calmer and extra magical under occasional wintertime haze or snow, and costs there for lodging and some tasks decrease outdoors holidays.
