

Large sectionals and modular furniture present unique moving challenges due to their size, weight, and multiple connected pieces. Bulldog Movers DMV uses specific techniques to move these items safely without damaging the furniture or the home.

Why Sectionals Require Special Handling from a DMV Moving Company

Sectional sofas often consist of multiple pieces that connect together, making them heavier and more awkward to DMV movers move than standard furniture. A skilled DMV moving company disassembles connectable pieces when possible to reduce weight and improve maneuverability through doorways and hallways.

Measuring Doorways Before Movers in DMV Arrive

Measuring doorways, hallways, and stairwells ahead of time helps determine whether a sectional needs to be disassembled or can be moved as one piece. Sharing these measurements with movers in DMV before the move allows the crew to plan the right approach in advance.

The packing services option includes protective wrapping for large upholstered pieces, while the commercial moving service supports businesses relocating modular furniture Look at this website used in offices or waiting areas.

Techniques for Moving Modular Furniture Safely

Modular furniture often separates into individual sections that can be moved independently before reassembly at the new location. This approach reduces strain on the crew and minimizes the risk of damage compared to attempting to move an entire connected unit at once.

- Measure doorways and hallways before moving day
- Disassemble sectionals into individual sections when possible
- Use furniture blankets to protect upholstery during transport
- Label sections to simplify reassembly at the new home

Protecting Upholstery During Transport

Fabric and leather upholstery can be scratched or stained if not properly protected during loading and transport. Furniture blankets, plastic wrap, and careful stacking in the truck help prevent this kind of damage on longer moves.

Why Experience with Large Furniture Matters

Handling oversized furniture correctly requires practice and the right technique to avoid injury or property damage. Bulldog Movers in Rockville MD brings years of experience moving sectionals and modular furniture safely for both residential and commercial customers.
